“ SITE 92 is an intriguing group exhibition at Smack Mellon, where artists examine and interpret the building itself — which dates from the late-1800s. Now situated in the heart of thriving DUMBO, the building was once an industrial powerhouse, providing steam power for industrialist Robert Gair's empire. Trace the building's history, as well as its relation to its surroundings (including the adjacent East River), through the installation pieces of ten different artists. ”

Smack Mellon says...

Smack Mellon is pleased to present SITE 92: Work Permit Approved, the third exhibition in a series that features site specific installations. Smack Mellon's expansive gallery space lends itself well to site specific projects. Not only does the building's uncommon architecture provide interesting points of departure for artists, but the unique history of the building does as well.
